OVERTURE

We take as our theme in this issue of The Mary Baldwin Magazine the elusive concept of service. Service, like quality, is difficult to define except through example. Even then, the adage "we know it when we see it," is more precise than most attempts at definition.

Mary Baldwin College has, however, at least set clear parameters for the exercise of service through its Vision Statement. That document expresses a goal for our students, that they be "engaged in the world beyond themselves." That engagement fosters the spirit of service because it identifies the world of others, and quietly admonishes against an egotistical pursuit of goals.

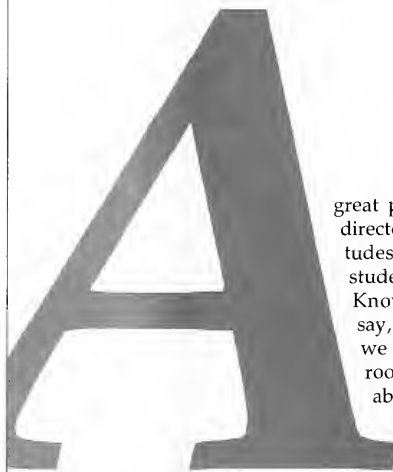

In our times of self-indulgence, personal bottom lines, and materialism, it is to the College's credit that, as an institution, we recognize the "other" as important to attainment of the complete life. Our students and faculty, as you will see, move beyond the rhetoric of service into its actual practice, and our programs, both academic and social, support them in this endeavor.

Mary Baldwin College goes beyond curriculum and programs to foster the practice of service. The College itself, as an institution and an entity, practices service as a habit of mind and as a characteristic of its rich history. At the root of the College's dedication to individual attention to her students, is the concept of service as an underlying goal which pushes Mary Baldwin forward to its sesquicentennial year.

It is little wonder, then, that service—elusive though it may be as a concept—is everywhere visible through the work of our students, our faculty, and the very mission of the College itself, as a hallmark of Mary Baldwin. As you read this issue, think of the many other fibers of service that are suggested, but not shown, which undergird your Mary Baldwin College.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

A great part of our work at Mary Baldwin is directed towards understanding the attitudes, aspirations, and priorities of the student body and of potential students. Knowing our constituency, one might say, is basic to working with it well. What we learn takes us far beyond the classroom. We try to know, for example, about career aspirations, and we are therefore, able to channel hopes and dreams into the focus: strategies that bring results. We try to know how students consider combinations of career responsibilities and family life. We try to know how students give their energy to achieving their own goals as opposed to giving energy to helping others. And we see a constantly shifting scene as young people make their way in the society around them.

The shifting scene urges us to report on some increasingly visible indications in which you, too, may have interest. Thus it is that we devote this issue of The Mary Baldwin Magazine to how we serve others.

You may have thought that among the young this was a "me" generation, an age devoted to the fulfillment of self, in both personal and professional terms. Indeed, you have heard that Mary Baldwin College does everything possible to help students fulfill personal and professional goals. We do. We urge our students to come to terms with their own strengths and weaknesses, talents and shortcomings, so that they have a realistic view of how their own personal niches in life may best be determined. There's lots of emphasis upon self-development.

But self-development is but one point along the track toward maturity. Further along is the awareness of a need to transcend self, to put others before self, to look outward, rather than inward, and to translate into "action for others" one's own best energies.

It is this stage of "action for others" that we move at Mary Baldwin as we work with our students. This we know is a sure foundation for the fulfilled life.

The College, therefore, so organizes its curriculum that examples of service abound.

The College, therefore, presents opportunities of an extracurricular nature so that student initiatives for service are readily inspired.

The College, therefore, supports in tangible ways the students who engage in service for others.

“Action for others, we suggest, must occur as the norm. . . . Action for others, we suggest, must become a way of life at Mary Baldwin so that it remains a way of life after graduation. . . .”

---

“Action for others,” we suggest, must occur as the norm, as the anticipated expectation. “Action for others,” we suggest, must become a way of life at Mary Baldwin so that it remains a way of life after graduation from Mary Baldwin.

Examples of these general principles fill the pages of the present edition of our magazine. To read them is to be inspired by the generosity of spirit, the sensitivity of giving, and the joy of service.

Our students certainly anticipate success in personal career and family plans, but not at the expense and neglect of others.

UNGLAMOROUS

W O R K

First, I wanted to get a perspective on AIDS for my research. But working with people with AIDS doesn't give a perspective: it becomes a way of life, because AIDS is their way of life.

My involvement with AIDS began with research. Four years ago I initiated a small project testing the knowledge and perceptions of individuals who engaged in high risk behavior living in an area of low AIDS incidence. Later, I expanded this work to include a study of college women's attitudes about their risk of contracting AIDS and a paper showing how questionnaire studies that had failed to link AIDS knowledge and behavior were improperly conducted. The early studies indicated that there were a substantial number of individuals in both high- and low-risk groups who felt they were risk-free, avoided learning about AIDS, and engaged in irresponsible behavior.

Last year, with the support of a grant from the Virginia Healthcare Foundation, I conducted studies of college instructors' knowledge about AIDS, lifestyle changes of persons diagnosed as HIV-infected, and the psychological impact on middle-aged women of the deaths of sons from AIDS. Each of these studies lead me more directly into issues surrounding the treatment of Persons with AIDS (PWAs).

While doing this work, I found that many people have many of the same misgivings about AIDS professionals as they do about persons with AIDS: one seems to have to justify why one would devote energy to this distasteful topic. Doing research on AIDS is still seen to be damaging to a career. So I will try to justify why I became involved.

In 1984 I called a colleague about a study we were doing, and she told me that her husband had AIDS. My reaction was stupid. Among other things, I wasn't particularly concerned, since the media were assuring us then that only 20% of AIDS patients would die. But a few weeks later I found out that he had died from a disease that humans normally don't get, that blinded his and reduced him from 200 to 120 pounds. My friend also developed AIDS, and before she died he extracted a promise from me to do "some of the unglamorous work." This is why I began, far from the center of the epidemic itself, doing studies of attitudes, beliefs, and behavior of low risk groups. I was intentionally doing the work that the funding agencies were not concerned with, although in 1985 it was hard to recognize any serious level of official concern about AIDS. This lack of concern was not only evident in government funding of programs and research: no study of AIDS was published by the 18 peer-reviewed journals of the American Psychological Association until December of 1988, seven years after the syndrome was clearly identified.)

Helping PWAs is unglamorous. When I returned to Staunton three years ago, I discovered that there were no organized assistance programs in the area, and I began visiting Robin, whose name I had gotten from a "buddy" program set up in Charlottesville for AIDS victims. Robin had been through two bouts of AIDS-related pneumonia and episodes of severe depression.

Besides keeping my promise to my friend, my motivation to become directly involved with individuals with AIDS came from a number of sources. I wanted to get a perspective on AIDS or my research. But working with PWAs doesn't give a perspective: it becomes a way of life, because AIDS is their way of life. Second, through my research, I came to believe that the official statistics on the extent of the epidemic were too optimistic. The realistic prospect of three million people in this country dying of AIDS during the next decade seemed a compelling reason to learn how to help.

Then, a friend from my undergraduate days died, a student of mine from West Virginia died, and in 1986 I visited a hospital ward with seven infants with AIDS. The nurses on that ward were radical activists. They handed me a tiny, bright-eyed baby while telling me that special arrangements could be made to facilitate adoption! Babies grab you in such emotional ways, and I'm sure that some of my motivation comes from sheer guilt for not taking that child home that afternoon. The front page picture of Barbara Bush in USA Today holding an infant with AIDS no doubt did more to get people's attention and allay their fears of contact than any other action over the past decade.

Robin was a talented draftsman. On good days he was one of the most interesting persons I have known. He was fascinated by vernacular architecture, and we spent hours looking at the Victorian houses in Staunton. He had a terrific sense of humor and a keen sense of the ridiculous. On bad days, he was the most difficult person I have ever had to deal with. Abandoned by most of his family and friends, he came to rely on me to such an extent that during his frequent medical crises I was not able to be away from my phone for more than an hour or two at a time. He was terribly sick and sometimes in nearly constant pain. He had vicious periods of depression. Robin stopped taking his medication while I was on vacation and died. Since then, I've "buddied" three more times. Alan is currently thriving in an NIH program, and Sean died of neurological complications shortly after I began visiting him. Rose reconciled with her family and moved back home.

Persons with AIDS need a wide range of support. Sometimes they need a nonjudgemental ear. Sometimes what they have to say is hard to listen to. One of the most difficult issues they have to resolve is a result of the long incubation of the AIDS virus. The time from infection to the first symptoms can be ten years, and many PWAs have to wonder whom they infected during the time they were symptom-free. AIDS makes people unbelievably weak and tired, so some of what is needed is changing and washing bed linen, cooking meals that will probably be picked at, helping them from one chair to another, sitting up with them on a night that they are convinced they will not live through, making normal physical contact so they feel like human beings. Sometimes they need a person with the energy that they don't have to yell at a rescue squad team or hospital workers to do their jobs. Sometimes they need an intermediary to reach out to their family one last time before they die. I have even had to arrange a funeral.

Working with PWAs has its liabilities aside from the actual risk of dealing with people who can become very sick very quickly with an infectious disease with very impolite symptoms. Anytime you feel the least bit sick or tired or sweat on a hot night or lose two pounds without trying, you wonder whether you have exposed yourself. The mothers in my study who have provided primary care for their sons before they died were suffering from a wide variety of psychological symptoms, including headaches, night terrors, family disruptions, high blood pressure, and violent outbursts. When I published this paper I described it as Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, because the problems were so similar to the psychiatric problems of combat soldiers and rape victims. I felt this would draw attention to the problem.

But there are rewards. I am skeptical when I hear about the great spiritual value in helping persons with AIDS. That, to my mind, is a way of describing a kind of superiority that one feels for having done this job others find so repugnant. The rewards I have found are that I have come to know intimately people I otherwise would never have known at all and that I perhaps have made a positive difference in the quality of the ends of their lives. I am glad that I arranged final meetings between Robin and his mother and sister and helped Rose get back in touch with her family. I am glad that I badgered Alan into joining the NIH treatment program.

As a teacher, the experience of direct work with PWAs helps me respond to concerns students bring when they find out that friends or relatives have AIDS. I am better prepared to help them sort out their feelings and decide what kinds of support they can offer. About a fourth of MBC students now know someone with AIDS. Three years ago it was about 2 percent, which is a provocative index of the rapid spread of the epidemic.

After Rose moved back home, I stopped working with individuals and doing AIDS research. Most volunteer programs suggest lengthy periods of time between commitments. Writing the article was stressful, and I realize I'm not ready to go back to helping individuals although I note there is now a support group forming locally. When I go back—and I will—there will be more treatment options, although still no cure or immunization in sight. There is an effective treatment for the pneumonia that has been the primary killer of AIDS patients. AZT offers hope for reducing the neurological impairments. I also have seen the reluctance to treat AIDS on the part of the medical community virtually disappear. The rate of new infections among the risk groups is down, although the rate among college students is growing. I hope there will be less general stigma on both persons with AIDS and AIDS volunteers, as more people realize that this is a virus that anyone can get, not a curse.

AIDS IN WOMEN: Targeting the Message

According to Dr. Jim Lavelle of Georgetown University Medical Center, 9 percent of the 100,000 diagnosed cases of AIDS occur in women, and the numbers are increasing. Dr. Lavelle said, "The number of new cases among gay and bisexual men has dramatically leveled off; coincidental with that, there is an increase in heterosexual men and women."

It appears now, that as increases in the disease shift to other segments of the population, research and education efforts will increase in those areas. "Large scale clinical trials have enrolled mostly gay and bisexual men because they have represented the majority," Dr. Lavelle said, "however, with these changing patterns, new clinical trials are being broadened to deal with AIDS in women and children."

Dr. Mary Young, Dr. Lavelle's colleague in Georgetown's Center for HIV Disease, is particularly interested in AIDS in women. According to Dr. Young, most of the cases in women are occurring in black and Hispanic women, usually in their twenties, who live in urban, inner city communities. Dr. Young said, "Since it takes about nine years for the first opportunistic infection to present itself, it means these women are being exposed to HIV (Human Immunodeficiency Virus) when they are young teenagers."

Dr. Young said that education is the only real hope for containing spread of the disease at the moment. "We must respond as a nation to prevent exposure," she said, "because there is no vaccine and no cure for AIDS."

Dr. Young said there are real challenges in educating this segment of the population. "How are we going to get young people to connect what they do today with an illness that may be as far as nine years down the road?" she asked. "We haven't been successful in our efforts to educate this group about the problems associated with teenage pregnancy, so how are we going to get this message across to them?"

Dr. Young said that resources must be targeted for the development of culturally sensitive educational materials. "We can't overstate the message, but we have to be realistic," she said, "and we have to be willing to talk about it in schools and churches."

"I usually don't noise it around that I work for charities; I like to keep it quiet because I don't like people thinking I do this kind of thing to win awards."

Earns Award For Community Service

by Betsy Dance

As most 14-year old girls are investigating ninth grade, chattering on the telephone and enduring the rigors of high school's academic agenda, Evi-Luise Pover is at college.

Pover, enrolled in a special five-year program at Mary Baldwin College, lives away from home in a dorm in Staunton, Virginia. Other whiz kids like herself populate her classes, as do 18-, 19- and 20-year-olds.

Although academically successful, Pover maintains a sense of balance. She also donates her time to troubled girls and to the homeless.

Her outstanding contributions earned Pover a Sea Breeze Award.

The Sea Breeze Awards, bestowed upon 50 youngsters across the country, are designed to honor "courage, heroism, integrity, compassion or public service."

The awards are a public service program established in 1986 by the Sea Breeze division of Clairol, a skin care product company.

Both genders, ages 13 to 19, are eligible for Sea Breeze Awards and each winner receives a $500 grant, and a "Sea Breeze Salutes the Spirit of Young America" citation.

"Sometimes I feel kind of weird because I'm 14 years old and in class with people who are 18 to 20 years old and then I come back home and have to be 14 again," she pointed out, but added, "I think education is very, very important if you want to survive in the world and not be taken advantage of."

Familiar with the have-nots, Pover has given her time and concern to the underprivileged since she was 12 years old.

Once a month, using donated foods, Pover cooks dinner for the homeless at St. Peter's Shelter in Southeast D.C. Last spring, she spent two months tutoring a young woman through final examinations. She also worked with troubled girls her own age.

"The girls at first thought I was kind of a nerd," Pover recalled, "because they were told, this girl is 14 and she's going to college, but I didn't lord it over them."

Community service, she explained, taught her to "appreciate my lifestyle a lot because I realize not everyone can go to college."

She was told about the Mary Baldwin program during an intense three-week stint she attended at The Johns Hopkins University where she studied European History.

Course work in her first year at Mary Baldwin will include high school and college level classes. After one year Pover will take the GED examination and, if successful, will receive her high school diploma.

Pover will be considered a traditional college student during the remainder of her time at Mary Baldwin. She plans to earn her doctorate in psychology and live and work in Virginia.

Content with leap-frogging over the high school experience, Pover said she has been an active school member and "four more years wouldn't make that much difference." She added that she stayed in touch with her high school friends.

Surprised by her selection as Sea Breeze winner, Pover explained, "I usually don't noise it around that I work for charities; I like to keep it quiet because I don't like people thinking I do his kind of thing to win awards."

She said the $500 prize money will offset living expenses and textbook costs.

"My parents always encouraged me to do what I wanted to do even if it didn't please them," Pover concluded, "and I'm very happy at Mary Baldwin."

Editor's Note: Evi Pover is now 15 years old, a sophomore and a third year PEG student at Mary Baldwin. She is the daughter of Yvonne and Peter Pover of Arlington, Va. This article is reprinted with permission of the Arlington Courier.

HOSPICE

by M. Roxanne Holl

“Usually, all our thoughts and words are oriented towards life and living, but it’s hard to use that same language when a member of a family is terminally ill.”

What makes a 27-year-old woman with a busy professional life change from a suit into Levis, a tee shirt and sneakers and head out into Augusta County to spend the afternoon with a woman who is terminally ill? This is a question that I am often asked, and I’ll admit have a little bit of trouble answering.

I don’t know why I do it. It would make more sense if I left work and did things that I really enjoy—like being with friends, working on a quilt or training for my next three-mile run. There are many explanations that I don’t use. It certainly isn’t for the money, because I pay for all of the expenses that I incur as a Hospice volunteer. It is not because I have a hidden desire to work in the field of medicine—quite the contrary. I’m surprised that I’m able to do this kind of work, because ninety-nine percent of the time things that are related to medicine make me feel quite faint. I can’t even bring myself to donate blood.

I’ll come back to the question of why I’m a patient care volunteer for Hospice of the Shenandoah. For now, let me tell you what I do as a

don’t know why I do it.

volunteer. First, I do specific tasks that the patient and family members ask me to do. I might prepare meals or stay with the patient. Other family members can get some relief from the strain of being with a terminally ill person twenty-four hours a day. (Before I began helping people who are terminally ill, I received basic training in “nursing skills,” and I use them frequently.) I help people feel more comfortable by repositioning them or giving back rubs. I may change a bed with the person in it or help with feeding a meal.

Since pain control is a primary concern, I make sure that the person I’m helping isn’t in pain. Although I don’t know how to relieve the pain, I know that medical science has progressed to the point that it is both unnecessary and unacceptable for a terminally ill person to have to experience pain. If someone I’m working with is feeling unnecessary pain, I make sure that the family works with their doctor to take care of the problem. I encourage family members to tell the physician what the person is experiencing and suggest that a modification in the treatment plan may be needed. I may also ask the Hospice nurse who is a part of our caregiving “team” to contact the physician.

Another responsibility I have as a hospice volunteer is to “be there” for the person who is sick, as well as for the family. By this I mean that I mostly listen. Some days I just sit in the room while the person sleeps. Sometimes they want to talk about what they have lost, what they can’t o anymore. One day a woman with whom I was working told me everything that she would do if she could get up and leave her house again. She was a generous person and now found that all she could do was lie on the couch and have others do for her. She told me she would go help paint her church's kitchen, and she said she would tend her garden and give the produce to friends and neighbors.

It is hard to listen to people tell you that they can't do what they want. So all I can do is just listen and nod my head to show that I'm trying to understand.

Being there for the family also involves a great deal of listening to them. As a volunteer, I often serve as a verbal punching bag for the family members. Emotions like anger, depression, resentment and despair are often expressed to me. When a family member screams in frustration about dealing with all of the problems that have arisen because of another person's illness, I have to remember that I am not the cause of the anger. Sometimes I can make suggestions about additional support that may be available. Often, however, all I can do is listen and hope that the family member feels better because feelings have been aired.

Language takes on a whole different slant when you're working with people who are terminally ill and their families. Usually, all our thoughts and words are oriented towards life and living, but it's hard to use that same language when a member of a family is terminally ill. When patients and their families talk about death and dying," it is often with a vocabulary that does not include those specific words. Each member of the family may choose different words to talk about death and dying. Until I find out what those words and phrases are, I often feel as if I'm walking through a verbal mine field that may explode before I can decipher the clues. One woman I was helping was dying of cancer. The illness was referred to as "when this happened" or "then she got this." "This" or "it" were the words used to talk about the cancer. Sometimes I feel as if I am using a secret code.

Much of the time I can't use the expressions that seem natural in other settings. For example, "Happy Birthday" and "Congratulations" just don't seem right when you're talking to a person who is dying. Once, however, I was surprised to learn that this isn't always the case. I found out that a woman that I had been helping had had a birthday, I didn't bring it up, because I didn't know how she felt about it. Much to my surprise, it had been a day of celebration for her, and she told me about what she had done. She was obviously happy about it. Neither she nor her husband made any reference to the fact that it may have been her last birthday.

And so, why do I do this? Why don't I just spend more time with some of my other volunteer work that is "fun," like doing public speaking for the local Talking Book Center? Why do I spend time doing volunteer work that I must admit is often very difficult? I suppose it is because of my own life experiences. I know at many times during my life there have been people who reached out to help me and my family. They did it because help was needed and not because the help was fun to give. I think this left me with a sense that I am morally obligated to give back, to be there for others as others have always been for me. Also, by their example, my parents taught me to be a giver and not just a taker.

When I finished my master's degree and was looking for a job, I wanted to work in a college and live in a community where I could contribute something. I had this sense of moral obligation to serve others, and I wanted to be in an environment that would support that. Mary Baldwin College and the Shenandoah Valley have given me this opportunity.

HOTLINE!

by Margaret Rose Fiester '81

When I graduated from Mary Baldwin with a degree in psychology, I had decided that I wanted to work in a service profession. An internship at the Woodrow Wilson Rehabilitation Center in Fishersville had helped me reach that conclusion.

Fresh out of college, however, I was a little unsure of myself, and didn't feel that I was mature enough to handle working directly with people in need of service. So, I went to work for a non-profit organization that promoted the use of satellites in education, maturing and gaining experience all the while.

I had always been interested in missing persons cases and, at one time, had even considered a career in law enforcement, so when an opportunity became available at the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, I applied immediately. I got the job and started working at the Center in October, 1987, as a hotline operator.

The Center has been in operation since October, 1984, and was established as a result of the Missing Children Assistance Act which mandated the formation of a national clearinghouse for missing children. The Center has a staff of technical advisors, usually former law enforcement officers who provide assistance and information to other law enforcement officers, social services personnel, and parents. In addition to the technical staff, the Center has attorneys and staff who provide information and guidance to other attorneys and parents involved in child abduction issues. The Center also produces a number of publications for distribution.

843 - 5678

Center, I went through a required six-week training course on hotline procedures, as well as additional training on child pornography from the U.S. Customs Service. This training was good preparation for my duties at the Center which included receiving reports on missing children, including runaways, from parents and police, taking confidential leads on missing children from concerned citizens, law enforcement officers and social service personnel throughout the country, and taking tips on possible cases of child pornography and prostitution. The training I had received in crisis intervention and counseling during my internship at Woodrow Wilson also proved invaluable in working at the center, as I talked to anxious parents who called in on the hotline.

The hotline averages about 190 calls per day, though we can usually expect more when a special program is aired. In fact, after the television movie "I Think My First Name is Steven" was aired, the hotline received over 8,000 calls in a four-day period. That was really something! The National Center has also been featured on "60 Minutes," "20/20," "The Oprah Winfrey Show," and "The Geraldo Rivera Show."

In 1988, I was promoted to my present position of Communications Specialist. My duties now include coordinating the distribution of pictures of missing children to over 1,000 organizations who want to assist the Center, including Avis, the American Gas Association, Advo Systems Incorporated, and The United States Senate. The photo distribution department also acts as the liaison between parents of missing children and Postal Instant Printing (PIP) stores nationwide. When a child is missing, we try to find a PIP store in the area from which the child is missing. PIP stores print the posters free of charge. Then the posters are distributed by parents, police, and other local non-profit organizations that are dedicated to the cause of missing children.

Sometimes parents simply want to talk, and I'm glad to listen. I also help them find local and state resources outside law enforcement and social service agencies to help them locate their missing children. These resources, which can supplement the work of often overwhelmed and understaffed public agencies, include non-profit organizations that offer counseling, help parents make posters, and advise parents on legal issues pertaining to missing children.

Since 1984, the Center has provided assistance in the recovery of thousands of children. Of course, there are dark moments—very difficult times—when missing children are found dead. I try not to dwell on these cases.

My most gratifying success came last September, when a case with which I had been closely involved was resolved—with a happy ending. In this case, the missing child's picture had appeared on an Advo Systems flyer. This led to an anonymous tip called in to the National Center's hotline. As it turned out, the anonymous caller was the child's babysitter, and the child, who had been missing for nearly two years, was recovered on her birthday.

Just Keeping In Touch

This issue of the Alumnae Magazine centers on "service." This is an awesome subject, which I believe covers all of life. As I write this I find myself looking forward to reading about the areas of service in which our alumnae are involved. My hope is that our years at Mary Baldwin helped all of us to know ourselves better, to discover new abilities, and to prepare us for service.

Whenever we serve—whether it be a simple meal, a lunch for the street people, or a banquet—we must serve with love and kindness. "Hot tongue and cold shoulders" won't do! Service must spring from the heart.

Webster defines service as "a performance of labor for the benefit of another." Each of us has gifts and talents which enable us to serve in unique ways. And each of us must make the choice to serve. Service is freely given. We are not guaranteed a "pay-off" or reward for our labor or kindness. (We may not even receive a "thank-you.")

Women in today's culture have vast potential to serve: we must begin where we live, with our families and friends; then we can bring our caring to the workplace, perhaps even choosing a service oriented profession; this attitude soon extends to our churches, service clubs, and other "causes" . . . Service need not be validated by charitable organizations. Even a "simple" conversation may serve encouragement and hope to a friend in despair. In short, all aspects of our lives give us the opportunity to benefit our fellow women and men.

Service does not require power or money. In other words, I do not have to have a high-level job, or be an "important" person, to serve others in a significant way, although people often model "servanthood" in these roles. Service does not depend on certain conditions—quite the opposite. Our circumstances often promote creative and unique service.

My mother lives in a nursing home. There I expect service for her from the staff, and it is excellent. It is the way the residents themselves interact and serve each other that has touched me deeply. They smile often, one another, touch, listen, and care. These people who have suffered many losses serve with what they have—themselves.

Mother Theresa was in Charleston, South Carolina, speaking in The Citadel football stadium. As she was talking about loving our neighbors, it began to rain. She said that love begins now, and suggested that those who had umbrellas share them with those who didn't. All were served!

Service does urge us to be sensitive, to see the need closest to us, and to let others serve us. To be ready, to encourage, to enable, to be grateful opens the door for service.

Martin Luther King wrote, "we must be the change we want to see in the world." I believe service releases the power to change the world. And so do you!

Ginny Wood Carroll Huffman

Eyes: Blue
Hair: Silver
Height: 5'3½"
Dress: 12
Shoe: 5½

Graduation from Mary Baldwin College: 1927

Virginia Wood Carroll Huffman '27 lives in North Miami, Florida. Now retired from her other work as a writer and in local television in Toledo, Ohio, at the age of 81 she still performs in television and radio commercials.

About her work she writes:

"Several years ago, at age 76, I did a commercial on a motorcycle (with a sidecar) for Southeast Bank. I gave the man in the sidecar a great ride. Also, at age 76, I foolishly said I could rollerskate. I did when I was 12. They had a young person on either side so I wouldn't break my neck.

They're (the commercials) easy to do, but many times the conditions are difficult. Almost always we're called to report on location at 5:00 or 6:00 in the morning. And that location may be nearby, but more frequently we have to trek off to one of the islands or a beach on the opposite side of the state. A memorable commercial one was filmed on a dairy farm, and we walked in a couple of inches of cow dung."

Ginny also has some very specific memories about Mary Baldwin in 1925-27, when she attended the Seminary:

"I was president of my class of, I believe, ten girls. I remember giving a talk on the terrace just below Hilltop. It was a windy day and there was no microphone. No one could hear a word I said, which was just as well.

Well do I remember Sunday mornings marching two by two across the street to the Presbyterian Church. A teacher at the side of every eight couples. The SMA boys stood at attention as we passed by in our black suits and grey Fedoras hats bent to suit each girl's fancy. And, of course, white gloves.

I remember Fanny Strauss, the Latin teacher, who explained she passed me in my senior year only because she wanted to get rid of the Wood girls. Secretly, I think she loved us. Also Pris Williams, whom we accused of X-raying our mail. And, of course, Miss Higgins—who was horrified when I told her that I had marred the landscape by sliding down a newly snow covered terrace from Hilltop to Main Hall. I used my muskrat coat as a sled."

Legacies honored at luncheon

Twelve Mary Baldwin legacies, all members of the brand new Class of 1993, were honored, along with their alumnae relatives, at a luncheon on August 3. President Tyson and the Alumnae Office staff were on hand to welcome the new students and families. The porch of the Alumnae House was the perfect spot for those who attended to enjoy a break from unpacking. Festive decorations in the class colors—purple and white—added to the cheery, relaxed atmosphere, and each new student was given an African violet—of course, a purple one—to take back to her dormitory room.

Legacies who attended the luncheon were Cora Elliott of Nassawadox, VA, granddaughter of Margaret T. A. Robbins '47; Kela Hart of Dallas, TX, daughter of Ernest Victor Hart '78; Angela King of Atlanta, GA, daughter of Gail McLennan King '69 and granddaughter of Nancy Clark McLennan '44; Whitney Wood of Petersburg, VA, daughter of Mary Williamson Lomb '67; Marcellene Leo of Atlanta, GA, daughter of Robin Wilson Lea '66; Jill McDaniel of Sarasota, FL, granddaughter of the late Mary Busses McDaniel '33; Traver Purtil of Charlotte, NC, daughter of Mary Lane Dudley Purtil '67; Milli Raynor of Mount Airy, MD, sister of Cora Leigh Raynor '65; Susan Schweickert of Midlothian, VA, daughter of Gail McAlpin Schweickert '65; Katie VanNess of Richmond, VA, sister of Rosaline VanNess '80; Carrie Wavell of Austin, TX, granddaughter of Cecile Cage Wavell '45; and Jennifer Waybright of Vinton, VA, daughter of Linda Campbell Waybright '87.

Virginia L. Lester SCHOLARSHIP

In 1985, the Alumnae Association instituted the Virginia L. Lester Scholarship in honor of the service and leadership of the seventh President of Mary Baldwin College. Awarded annually, this scholarship is presented to a student who is an alumna legacy and who has demonstrated academic excellence and strong leadership abilities.

This $2,500 scholarship was established from the proceeds of the very first promotion of the Virginia Sampler Project of the Alumnae Association. Each year, the Alumnae Association funds the $2,500 award in addition to contributing $5,000 to an endowment fund, so that eventually the scholarship will be self-perpetuating. Other Alumnae Association projects, such as the ABC credit card, the official MBC watch, and the alumnae travel program, also benefit the Lester scholarship.

Nancy Cornelia Thackston '92 became the fifth recipient of the Lester Scholarship during Homecoming/Commencement '89 Weekend. Nancy, the granddaughter of Cornelia Quarles Moffet '27, said "I could not have received this honor if not for the inspiration and support of my grandmother. It's an honor to follow in her footsteps."

A rising sophomore who is majoring in political science, Nancy maintains an outstanding academic record as one of Mary Baldwin's Bailey Scholars. She is also a member of the volleyball team.

Nancy says she is an avid sports fan and enjoys riding and outdoor activities. She spent the last three summers working as a life guard for the Charlotte Country Club. Nancy says she also finds pleasure in reading or being with friends.

LaRaine Raymond is New Chapter Development Director

LaRaine J. Raymond joined the Office of Alumnae Activities in September as Director of Chapter Development. In this capacity she serves as the primary liaison between the College and over forty alumnae chapter areas. She will often be on the road, traveling across the East and South to provide as much support to chapter leaders as possible.

LaRaine comes to Mary Baldwin from Massanetta Springs, Inc., where she has been director of marketing and public relations since 1985. Massanetta Springs is the conference center of the mid-Atlantic synod of the Presbyterian church. A Presbyterian herself and a native of Savannah, Georgia, LaRaine graduated in 1978 from Georgia Southern College. LaRaine's many skills—in marketing, volunteer management, special events, and writing—will serve her well at Mary Baldwin. "But," says Executive Director, Crista R. Cabe, "one of her most important assets in this job is her personality. She is delightful, charming, and able to get the job done. I am sure our alumnae will take to her immediately."

Members of the Class of 1948 purchased the iron porch railing in front of Memorial dorm in memory of Betty Roberts Bertelson, '48. Betty was house president of Memorial in 1947-48. An engraved brass plaque has been mounted on the railing dedicating this memorial to Betty from "her very close friends."

Alumna's Book Offers Sound Advice on College

Earlier this year, Nancy Cohen Locher's book, College: A Complete Guide for Parents and Students was published by Liberty Publishing Company. Nancy, who graduated from Mary Baldwin in 1951, knows what she's talking about. A dean at Gettysburg College since 1968, Nancy draws from her years of experience counseling parents and students about college decisions from application to graduation. In addition, she is the mother of two college graduates.

Nancy holds a master's degree in psychology from the University of North Carolina. She and her husband, Jack, live at 65 Red Patch Avenue, Gettysburg PA 17325.

Miss Lillian Eisenberg '14, who recently moved to Maryland, celebrated her 75th Homecoming in May. Miss Eisenberg's father was a professor of history at the Seminary. Her sister, Dorothy Marie, is a member of the class of 1930.

- And YOU:

THE MBC NETWORK

Today, most Mary Baldwin students look forward to rewarding careers in a variety of fields and locations. Since Mary Baldwin does an exemplary job of combining a solid liberal arts curriculum with career preparation, alumnae tend to be quite successful in their chosen vocations.

However, it is often difficult for MBC students and alumnae who wish to change careers to know exactly what type of jobs would best suit them and how to achieve what they want in a particular profession. Alumnae and friends of the College can help.

Mary Baldwin has a well-organized communication network for career assistance. The program is called The Career Development Support Network (THE NETWORK). THE NETWORK assists Mary Baldwin students and alumnae in exploring careers, finding internships and locating job opportunities. Currently over 100 alumnae are participating in the program.

THE NETWORK relies upon a nationwide network of members who voluntarily act as advisors to job seekers, giving them information about their careers and the organizations they work for. For the students and alumnae who are seeking employment, it is also a way to connect with job opportunities.

THE NETWORK is sponsored by the Rosemarie Sena Center for Career and Life Planning and the Office of Alumnae Activities. Its volunteers cover major cities of the eastern seaboard as well as provide contacts wherever friends or alumnae of Mary Baldwin can be found.

A NETWORK directory is published each year. For each participant, the directory includes address, job title, a brief description of her work history and photograph, which is optional.

Please join us in supporting Mary Baldwin students and alumnae, and keep in touch with friends. To participate, just complete the survey and return it to us.

If you are willing to join THE NETWORK, please complete this form and mail to

The gravestone of Mary Julia Baldwin, Thornrose Cemetery, Staunton, Virginia

Representatives of the Alumnae Association were busy during the weekend of October 6-7 when they were on campus for Founders' Day activities, including Fall Convocation, and for Fall Leadership Conference. On October 6, members of the College's Alumnae Association honored the memory of Mary Julia Baldwin with a ceremony in Thornrose Cemetery. During the summer, the gravesite had been cleaned and realigned by members of the Staunton/West Augusta Chapter of the Association.

During Fall Convocation, also on October 6, the Richmond and Staunton/West Augusta Chapter of the Alumnae Association received Chapter Achievement Awards in recognition of their outstanding service to the College in the areas of admissions recruitment, general chapter activities support of the Annual Fund, and fund raising.

Chapters in ACTION

Charleston, WV

Lexington, VA

---

Susan Sisler '82 hosted a recruitment party for area applicants and parents last May. Becky Gibbs '88, assistant director of admissions, was also in attendance.

Lynchburg, VA

The Lynchburg Alumnae Chapter held a dessert with Crista R. Cabe in May. Sally Stallworth Sebrell '73 hosted this gathering and Betsy Silver Burton '81 served as coordinator.

Peninsula, VA

Letia McDaniel Drewry '78, a member of the Advisory Board of Visitors and Chapter Contact, planned a luncheon held in June for Hampton, Newport News, and Williamsburg alumnae. Crista R. Cabe represented the College. Anne Coleman Huskey '58 sponsored this very successful event at the James River Country Club.

Philadelphia, PA

In June, the Philadelphia Alumnae Chapter participated in a Virginia Schools' Picnic at Shawnee-at-Highpoint. Laura O'Hear Church '82, Chair of the Philadelphia Chapter, helped organize this event.

Raleigh/Durham/ Chapel Hill, NC

---

In May, alumnae of Raleigh, Durham, and Chapel Hill attended a reception honoring Crista R. Cabe. Dena Aretakis Horn '81 coordinated and hosted the reception.

Roanoke, VA

Dr. Patricia Menk was the featured speaker at the Roanoke Alumnae Chapter's summer luncheon. She spoke on "Writing the History of Mary Baldwin College." Also attending was Laura Catching Alexander '71, director of the Annual Fund. Cyndi Phillips Fletcher '82, Chapter Chair, and Judy Lipes Garst '63 planned this event.

Staunton, VA

The Staunton Alumnae Chapter hosted a reception honoring commuter students with President Tyson and Roxanne Hall, director of residential and commuter student programs. Katherine Lichtenberg, director of alumnae admissions, and Crista R. Cabe were also in attendance. Nancy Kunkle Carey '51 and Nancy Payne Dahl '56 coordinated this event.

Tulsa, OK

A Tulsa Alumnae gathering was held in June at the home of Trustee Liddy Kirkpatrick Doenges '63. Crista R. Cabe attended from the College. Betty Wright '77 assisted with this event. Several of the alumnae who attended have organized their group into our newest Alumnae Chapter. Betty Wright '77 is serving as chair; Dana Shapiro '80 is co-chair; and Sherrill Feagan Jack '80, Shawn Brown Thompson, Maoude Jeanine Holmes '87, and Helen "Pebbles" Stone Mass '67 form the steering committee.

A MESSAGE FROM DR. CYNTHIA H. TYSON

Mary Baldwin College is committed to change as a progressive response to the world around it while, at the same time, holding on to enduring values. Your contributions to the 1988-1989 Annual Fund, detailed in the pages that follow, reflect your commitment to this evolving change. The Annual Fund allows us to be progressive: it supports faculty salaries and development, computer equipment, library facilities and acquisitions, laboratory and athletic equipment and more. All are improved by your generosity.

As our 1992 Sesquicentennial Celebration approaches, we have an opportunity to observe the many changes that have taken place over the last one hundred and fifty years. Those who support the Mary Baldwin College Annual Fund insure the continued success of the College. Your help allows us to remain strong and to offer our women the finest liberal arts education.

On behalf of all whose lives your gift enhances, I thank you.

Sincerely,

Cynthia H. Tyson
President
Mary Baldwin College

ANNUAL FUND AWARDS

These prestigious awards recognize and acknowledge our alumnae's broad support for Mary Baldwin College's future growth. The awards are presented each year and are named in honor of past presidents of Mary Baldwin College. Accepting the awards on behalf of their respective classes, class delegates represent their peers during the National Alumnae Association Meeting. The classes listed below are acknowledged for their outstanding friendship to the College.

The Fraser Bowl
Class of 1942

Awarded to the class presenting the largest gift to the 1988-1989 Annual Fund, the Class of 1942 secured the Bowl by contributing $39,659 to the Annual Fund.

The Jarman Cup
Class of 1939

An outstanding 76% of the 50th Reunion Class of 1939 contributed to the Annual Fund this past year, thereby assuring the awarding of the Cup. The Jarman Cup is presented to the class demonstrating the highest level of class participation in the Annual Fund.

The Lewis Platter
Class of 1942

Congratulations go to the Class of 1942 for their outstanding increase of $19,598 in giving to the Annual Fund.

The Spencer Pitcher
Class of 1949

A most important Annual Fund goal is to increase alumnae participation in the yearly campaign of the College. The Pitcher is bestowed on the class obtaining the greatest percentage increase in participation and the Class of 1949 is recognized for the largest percent increase in participation at 62% (from 47% in 1987-88).

Reunion Class Gifts

Traditionally, classes celebrating their 10th, 25th or 50th reunions have presented special gifts to the College. The Classes of 1939, 1964 and 1979 are hereby gratefully acknowledged for their extraordinary participation in a program benefiting the College community.

Class Agent Program

In its fourth year, the Class Agent Program has provided a more personal way of encouraging alumnae to respond to the College's annual financial needs. Two to three alumnae from each class write to their classmates and encourage them to give to the Annual Fund through personal solicitation. The important work of the Class Agents touches every person and aspect of Mary Baldwin College, and their efforts are sincerely appreciated.

THE HONOR ROLL

Alumnae contributors to the 1988-1989 Annual Fund are listed below according to class year. The College community thanks each of these alumnae for their investment in Mary Baldwin College's future.

PARENTS COUNCIL

The active support network between the Parents Association and the College is guided by the important work of the Parents Council. These current and former parents involve themselves in such activities as career development, communications, fundraising and student recruitment. Our deepest gratitude to these devoted parents, for both their time and their commitment to Mary Baldwin College.

CHURCHES

Mary Baldwin College was founded in 1842 with the strong support of the Presbyterian Church, and this bond continues today. Individual churches and the Synod of the Mid-Atlantic contribute to educational progress through their relationship with the College. Many thanks to these churches for their support.

FOUNDATIONS AND CORPORATIONS

Mary Baldwin College appreciates the level of support provided by the business community. Our gratitude is extended to these generous patrons.

In addition to national corporate support, Mary Baldwin College has had the benefit of local support as well through the Valley Area Business and Professional Campaign (VACPC). Under the leadership of VACPC chair Robert Landes of J. B. Wine and Sons, this program raised $25,304 for Mary Baldwin this year. In addition to immediate community and area support, VACPC activities have also promoted public relations and communication between Mary Baldwin and area corporations.

SCHOLARSHIP GIFTS

Traditionally, scholarships at Mary Baldwin College have been instrumental in attracting and retaining good students. Many alumnae, friends and parents have made a commitment to the College through generously endowing the following scholarships, which benefit not only the individual recipient but the entire College. Space limitations preclude inclusion of each benefactor's name, but we deeply appreciate each of their efforts. The scholarships listed below are by no means all the scholarships at Mary Baldwin College, however these reflect those scholarships to which contributions were made for 1988-1989. Additional recognition of these important gifts appears in the College catalog.

PHENOMENAL

Phonathon

OFF TO A GREAT START

The 1989-90 Phonathon is off to a rousing start, and it looks like it's going to be a phenomenal year!

Nineteen students manned the phones October 9-12 and November 6-9 raising $85,600 in the first two rounds of calling. This figure is up 70 percent from last year's total of $50,350 during the same time period. The average gift per person was recorded at $72.05 this year compared to $42.53 for the same time period last year, a 69 percent increase in the average gift.

During the first four nights of calling, students raised $36,675 in pledges from alumni and friends. If that wasn't impressive enough, they upped that during the next four nights of calling when pledges were recorded at $48,925.

Annual Fund Associate Director Anne McIntosh Holland '88 said the focus this year has been on asking people to get their money in before December 31, 1989, so they might take advantage of their income tax deductions this calendar year. However, the actual fiscal year for the Annual Fund does not end until June 30, 1990, and Holland said the Annual Fund staff feel certain they can meet their 1989-90 Phonathon goal of $108,000.

"The Phonathon works because students are calling alumnae," Holland said. "The students are on campus and are calling many who have never been back to their alma mater. For many alumnae, the Phonathon is renewing their connection to Mary Baldwin."

Sophomores are Rachel Mayes, Kristin Collins, Julia Shugart, Mary Yonker, Alice Washington, Tiffany Taylor, India Parrish, Christine Martin, Tonya McNabb, Kimberly Hughes and Mary Hughes.

Freshmen are Julie Brown and Virginia Fontana. In addition, Catherine Evans, a PEG student, is a Phonathon caller.

The Phonathons are conducted from the third floor of the Miller House in the Annual Fund office, and will continue throughout the school year on November 13-16, January 29-31 and February 1, February 5-8, April 2-5, and May 7-10.

The Mysterious Trail of

INCENSE

Resins, including the familiar names of frankincense and myrrh, have been used since the beginning of civilization in the preparation of incense, medicines, cosmetics, and perfumes. Various formulations of incense were used as air fresheners, ceremonial offerings, and in banquets, festivals, and funeral services among the Egyptians, Hindus, Israelites, Greeks, Romans, and Europeans of the Victorian era.

Several years ago, Hampton Hairfield, whose wife, Betty, teaches chemistry at Mary Baldwin, noticed that the incense being burned in his church's services produced an unpleasant odor. Hampton said, "The fragrant aroma I remembered from my days as an altar boy had been replaced by one that reminded me of burning tires."

At about the same time, Lundy Pentz, Betty's colleague on the Mary Baldwin faculty, had detected the same change in the incense used at his church. As the three shared their observations, an idea emerged for a joint research project, which resulted in their formulation of fragrant incense, as well as the development of a rapid, simple, and definitive test that can be used by importers, incense manufacturers, and archaeological chemists for identifying resins, which are the principal ingredients in incense.

Initially, the research team of Hairfield, Hairfield, and Pentz thought a few phone calls or letters to the companies that were supplying incense to churches would solve the problem of the foul odor. Quite to the contrary, they didn't get any answers. "Each time we called," Hampton said, "we were told that the formula for the incense was just what it had always been."

It was obvious to the three, however, that something was different. "We had a good idea that the problem lay with the olibanum, or frankincense as it is commonly called," Betty said. "Olibanum is the primary ingredient in incense, and we suspected that something about that had changed," she said.

Hampton Hairfield, altar boy

"What we thought had happened was that the manufacturers were substituting a cheaper resin that burned with an unpleasant smell for the true olibanum that produced a fragrant smell," Hampton explained.

Finally, giving up on getting information from the suppliers, Hampton, Betty, and Lundy decided to try a different route. In the earliest days of their search for sweet-smelling incense, they had learned that olibanum is produced by trees of the genus Boswellia. "There are about a dozen species of Boswellia which grow in India, Arabia, and the eastern coast of Africa. Four species—B. serrata, B. papyrifera, B. frereana, and B. carterii—are reported to be important commercial sources of olibanum," Hampton said. "Serrata grows in India, papyrifera in Ethiopia, and frereana and carterii in Somalia," he explained.

"However, we weren't able to link our various commercial samples of resin to their botanical sources," he said. "We searched through ancient texts, but found them to be of little help. They didn't address the question of botanical origin."

"Next, we turned to scientific literature," Betty said. "Though we did find the chemical structure of various resins had been described, isolated and characterized, and various chemical properties noted, we learned that no significant attention had been given to the botanical source of the material. No one had attempted to develop a chemical taxonomy linking the various natural resins to specific trees," she explained.

So, Hampton, a high school teacher certified in chemistry, biology, and English; Betty, professor of chemistry at Mary Baldwin; and Lundy, associate professor of biology; resolved to develop such an identification system. Using a chemical process called thin layer chromatography, they compared the alcohol extracts of commercial brands of resins with botanical samples which they obtained from a museum.

"The thin layer chromatography produced distinctive patterns for each of the extracts, so we were able to match many commercial and botanical samples," Betty said. "We were able to determine," she continued, "that the unpleasant smelling resin used in the incense in our churches was the Indian variety of olibanum, B. serrata. Hampton then confronted the president of a large incense company, who readily admitted that the formula had been changed recently."

Eventually, the researchers pieced together the whole story. "Incense manufacturers had been importing their olibanum from Ethiopia and Somalia. However, they had started getting it from India to save money," Hampton said. He explained that in India Boswellia serrata trees are cultivated, producing huge quantities of olibanum for sale to the perfume industry. "Several manufacturers finally confirmed that they had substituted Indian olibanum because of its availability and lower price," he said.

"Olibanum is used primarily as a fixative in perfume," Betty said, "and the Indian variety suits that purpose just fine. Unfortunately, when Indian olibanum is burned, it smells like burning rubber, and that was what was wrong with the incense being used at church."

The immediate results were that Hampton Hairfield and Lundy Pentz began to manufacture their own incense, using Somalian and Ethiopian varieties ordered directly from an importer in New York. "The fragrance of the incense is even better than I remembered it," Hampton said with a smile.

Results of the "incense project" have reached much farther than the churches of Staunton, however. Several years ago, the Hairfields became involved in an archaeological project through Dr. Curt Beck, a chemist from Vassar who was familiar with articles they had published with Lundy Pentz. Dr. Beck sought their help in identifying a resin sample retrieved from a Late Bronze Age ship that had wrecked in the 14th century B.C. at Ulu Burun, near Kas in southern Turkey.

Symbolically, incense represents the zeal that should burn in the heart of the Christian. Its sweet odor signifies the fragrance of Christianity; and its smoke, the ascent of prayer before the throne of God. Psalm 141:2 asks: "Let my prayer come like incense before you, O Lord."

Coincidentally, this shipwreck was being excavated by an underwater archaeological team led by Dr. George F. Bass, who is married to Anne Singletary Bass '59. Dr. Bass and his assistants had discovered that the ship's cargo included 150 Canaanite amphoras, or two-handled jars, containing altogether nearly a ton of an opaque, yellow resin.

Hampton said, "We knew that the resins most important in ancient trade which fit the description of being opaque and yellow are olibanum, terebinth and mastic." He added, "Terebinth and mastic are resins from species of the Pistacia tree, which are relatives of the tree that produces pistachio nuts."

"Olibanum was ruled out by John Mills and Raymond White of the National Gallery in London," Betty said. "They determined by gas chromatography/mass spectroscopy that the Bronze Age material was a Pistacia resin."

"Through thin layer chromatography, we obtained a fingerprint pattern which made it clear that the specific Pistacia that had produced the Bronze Age resin was terebinth and not mastic."

This information may help archaeologists like George Bass determine the significance of terebinth in Mediterranean trade during that time. In the April-May 1989 issue of Modern Maturity, Dr. Bass said that he believes that this particular ship had sailed from the Syro-Palestinian coast, sinking on its way to Egypt by way of the Aegean Sea. According to Dr. Bass, the incense may have been intended for use in Egyptian religious rituals.

More recently, the Hairfields' work has concentrated on the analysis of the acidic fractions of commercial olibanum resins using Mary Baldwin's Varian gas chromatography and the Hewlett-Packard gas chromatograph-mass spectrometer at Virginia Tech. Working with student research assistants in the chemistry labs at Mary Baldwin, the Hairfields have determined that Boswelllic acid is present in botanical samples of three of the Boswellia species that are important in the manufacture of incense and perfume in this country—B. carterii, B. serrata, and B. papyrifera. "These acids are not present in any other of the commercial resins that resemble olibanum in appearance, namely mastic, pine, myrrh, and elemi," Betty said. Nor were the acids found in B. frereana, according to research done by Margaret Eckenrode '89, during her senior year at Mary Baldwin.

Other Mary Baldwin chemistry students have attempted to identify the compound responsible for the acrid smell of Indian olibanum, as well as compounds in the Ethiopian variety. "We're going to keep working on those," Betty said.

Using botanical samples provided by a museum, the Hairfields are also engaged in research through which they hope to determine whether the olibanum of Arabia is chemically different from that of Somalia. They want to test the idea that the Arabian olibanum might be produced by B. sacra, another species of Boswellia.

"We're especially interested in this," Hampton said, "because the species of the Boswellia tree that grows in the Dhofar region of southern Arabia is reputed to be the source of the finest resin for the manufacture of incense. It is also thought to be the variety brought by the Magi to

PREPARATION OF A CHURCH INCENSE

To compound church incense, one needs frankincense, myrrh, and gum benzoin. These ingredients can often be found in herb shops or Greek delicatessens. Place a very small piece of charcoal on some metal object that can absorb heat (an empty soup can placed upside down on a trivet works well), and light the charcoal. After the charcoal becomes hot, place a small amount of each of your ingredients, one at a time, on the charcoal. Repeat until you can easily recognize each from its odor. Caution: Don't burn myrrh alone—its odor is very strong.

Using a 1/4 teaspoon measure, conduct several experiments in which you mix the three ingredients in different proportions. Be sure to make an accurate record of the proportions of each resin in each of your mixtures. Burn each of your incense mixtures and select your favorite.

the baby Jesus. According to the Hairfields, only a few tons of the Arabian frankincense are being produced each year.

"Unfortunately, this scrubby tree grows in an area almost as isolated now as it was thousands of years ago, and it's in Soviet-controlled territory," Hampton said.

So, the incense trail winds from Arabia, Ethiopia, Somalia, and India, to Caanan and even to the bottom of the Mediterranean Sea. It is a journey that has crisscrossed continents and oceans, and stretched across thousands and thousands of years of time. What is most amazing, though, is the numbers and diversity of the people, then and now, who share an interest in incense and who have traveled the incense trail: ancient Egyptian and Hebrew priests, Bronze Age traders, perfumers, clergy, archaeologists, art conservationists and historians, chemists, botanists, and Mary Baldwin students. A Thin layer chromatography is a technique in which a small spot of the material to be analyzed is placed near the bottom of a plate coated with an absorbent powder. The plate stands upright in a container holding about 1/4" of liquid. As the liquid rises, carrying the various components up the plate, a distinctive pattern is formed which can serve as a fingerprint in identifying materials. Once these distinctive patterns were obtained, the research team was able to develop a rapid method for linking resins with their botanical sources.

Dr. Elizabeth Hairfield is a professor of chemistry at Mary Baldwin. She joined the faculty in 1970. Hampton Hairfield, Jr. retired in 1988 after a 31-year career as a teacher in the public schools of Augusta County. Dr. Lundy Pentz, (not pictured) who came to Mary Baldwin in 1980, is an associate professor of biology. All three members of the research team continue to be interested in incense and aromatic resins. In addition to publications related to their research in incense and resins, Dr. Hairfield and Dr. Pentz are the authors of several other independent publications.

Dr. George F. Bass, Abell Professor of Nautical Archaeology at Texas A & M., has published six books on underwater archaeology. His wife, Anne Singletery Bass, who is an accomplished musician, graduated from Mary Baldwin in 1959. She has accompanied her husband on numerous archaeological expeditions.

IS TUTORING

THE ANSWER

Many would agree that outside academic assistance for most children is helpful. But would it be a wise decision for you to seek individual tutoring for your child outside of the regular school environment? Will this extra help produce positive results?

Some typical reasons parents seek additional help are that the child consistently requires homework assistance or gets poor grades. The teacher makes comments about the "struggle" in certain areas and parental attempts to tutor directly or simply encourage fall short. But would you necessarily look outside the school for the same reasons?

It might be a wise idea to observe your child for characteristics displayed at home that could carry over to the classroom. Notice whether inattention is a frequent attribute. Does your child frequently begin a task but not finish it and then complain, "There's nothing to do. I'm bored?" Perhaps the television is the first choice by your youngster at such a time. Or maybe you have witnessed poor organizational skills. The child's room is messy and your child doesn't seem able to get things cleaned up. After fidgeting and complaining, the child is right back staring at the TV.

Should you seek outside help such as academic tutoring or counseling? Look at the child's daily schedule first. It might not be a good idea to add another activity to an already busy schedule. Too much structured time may have detrimental effects. Consider dropping violin, or horseback riding, or T-Ball, or gymnastics, or piano, or Brownies, or 4-H, or band, or football, or something—before you add something else.

But why give up an important extracurricular activity for academic tutoring that is just more of the same from the regular classroom day? It would be better to optimize the time during classroom hours than to add another focused lesson. Simply communicating often with the teacher can be helpful to the teacher for effective instruction. Write frequent notes. Call often. Make appointments to chat with the teacher. If tutoring is needed, then check out what your child's school offers in the way of tutoring.

Look for creative approaches by enthusiastic tutors. College students preparing to be teachers are excellent choices. They have the interest, the energy, the time, and are in the process of learning up-to-date teaching techniques in teacher education programs.

Good tutoring begins with communication with the classroom teacher and assessment. The tutor seeks to discover what the student's strengths and weaknesses are. For example, a weakness in visual memory may exist and would be good to know about. If the auditory channel is strong, it might be best to emphasize a phonics approach rather than rely on remembering the visual configuration of words. (One way to find this "assessment" information is with the Illinois Test for Psycholinguistic Abilities or ITPA.) Teaching reading with the phonics approach certainly seems to be nothing new but in the case of a low preference for learning visually, the choice of phonics is tailored specifically to the needs of that individual.

Tutoring could be helpful by providing activities that supplement one perceptual area, such as auditory discrimination, or for one academic area. It is possible that there are problems specific to mathematics or language arts. Therefore the tutoring would be sought for only math or language. Or the tutoring could be structured to work with handwriting, social skills, or written expression.

Tutoring can produce results primarily because it is designed to meet the unique needs of the individual. The teacher attempts to individualize instruction in the classroom, but is limited by time and teacher/pupil ratio constraints. The tutor can assess for perceptual and academic problems using assessment "instruments" (testing), informal inquiry, and by seeking information from others. If for example, the general area of mathematics is determined to be the area of focus, a diagnostic instrument, such as the Key Math Test, can be administered to determine precisely the current level of functioning and specific strengths and weaknesses. If division is difficult for your child, the tutor would perhaps discover that the underlying reason is poor conceptualization of place value. Place value could be viewed before working on dividing.

To make the final decision about tutoring, seek counsel from many sources. A balanced perspective is best. In some cases, tutoring would be just another chore for a child already too busy with structured time. Perhaps time would allow for normal maturing and what is difficult now will become natural and easy later on. On the other hand, the best decision for your child might be to receive individualized tutoring specifically tailored to perceptual and academic needs. To wait would be to miss the critical "window of opportunity." ▲

VOLUNTEER PROGRAM

in Public Schools

When students in Mary Baldwin's teacher education program get around to their student teaching experience during their senior years, they are well aware of what to expect. By serving as volunteer teaching assistants in Staunton's public schools and through a tutoring service offered on campus, the students have already worked with a variety of age groups and ability levels. Armed with confidence from their experiences, students enter practice teaching with a minimum amount of apprehension, fully committed to careers in education. "Very few students who complete student teaching decide at that point that they don't really want to teach," said Patty Westhafer, professor of education at Mary Baldwin. "They know what it takes to be a teacher, and they know that's the kind of work they want to do."

According to Dr. Westhafer, Mary Baldwin's school volunteer program, operating now in Robert E. Lee High School and a number of elementary schools, is well-established, and students are in great demand. "Teachers, parents, guidance counselors, principals and especially students are enthusiastic about the contribution our students are making in the schools," she said. "They realize that we are a great resource for them, and they're willing to let the students come whenever they can. They know the demands on the time of college students."

At the high school, MBC students work with young people who appear to be potential drop-outs. The volunteers spend two hours a week with students going over assignments, building the confidence of discouraged students, and trying to convince them to stay in school. "It's a 'day-by-day, one-step-at-a-time' approach," Dr. Westhafer said. "Our students acknowledge their own discouragement. They let these high school students know that it's normal to feel that way and to be confused at times. But, at the same time, they tell those kids to keep on working in spite of the feelings."

Dr. Westhafer cited the work of one minority volunteer who worked with minority girls to encourage them to take more math and science classes. "The guidance counselor said it was difficult to convince the students of the importance of taking these classes, so our student went to the high school and met with the students.

She encouraged them to look ahead and not to look for the easiest way to get through high school. The results were remarkable."

One Mary Baldwin volunteer worked with a student who had transferred from another high school and wasn't doing well in the new atmosphere. "Our tutor focused mainly on improving study skills, and that seemed to take care of the problem. In just two or three weeks, the student seemed to be back on track," Dr. Westhafer said.

On campus, Monday through Thursday, Riddle House, which is headquarters for Mary Baldwin's Office of Continuing Education, as well as the teacher education program, becomes a tutoring center. Elementary students work with tutors two days a week from 4:00 to 5:00; high school students from 7:00 until 8:30. The students, who are referred by guidance counselors, teachers, and their parents, bring their books and assignments and work with tutors.

Some have learning disabilities, but others are gifted students whose grades don't reflect their abilities. All seem to be benefiting from the extra attention they are getting in the tutoring program.

Parents have reported amazing successes. One boy improved his grades in five subjects after being tutored. A parent said, "My child is doing so much better since she has been tutored. She was getting Ds and now she's getting As and Bs." Another parent whose child had made Ds in reading and hated school said she had considered sending the child to a private school. However, as a result of tutoring, the child's reading grade went from a D to an A, and the plans for private school were cancelled.

During the time they are serving as volunteers, students work closely with the faculty in Mary Baldwin's education department. "This helps us be certain that our students are practicing correct, appropriate teaching techniques, and also ensures that the pupils receiving help are getting what they need," Dr. Westhafer explained.

Dr. Westhafer said, "In many cases, the teachers offer clear, specific guidelines for what they want our students to do. On the other hand, because the Mary Baldwin students come to them with basic understanding of the educational process, many are willing to let our students work independently." In those cases, Dr. Westhafer said Mary Baldwin faculty work in an advisory capacity to ensure that MBC students use appropriate materials, methods and techniques.

Mary Baldwin students have become volunteers in the school programs in a variety of ways, according to Dr. Westhafer. "Some learn about these opportunities in education foundation classes," she said. "Others are drawn by articles in Campus Comments (the student newspaper), but others learn about it 'through the grapevine' and from other tutors."

Patty Westhafer said, "Mary Baldwin students are enthusiastic about their work in the schools. They love working with younger students and are the best recruiters imaginable for our volunteer program. Of course, our students feel good about what they're doing to help others, but several have found that their own study habits improve and, along with that, their grades. Apparently, they follow their own advice."

Note:

In his push for education reform, Virginia's Governor Gerald Baliles mandated the end of the education major, forcing many schools in this state to restructure entire programs.

Not Mary Baldwin. The College's education program is and always has been a certification program, not a major. Students must complete all requirements for the bachelor of arts degree, including a major program of studies, as well as the general and professional education requirements for certification.

TO Health

BY STEVEN A. MOSHER

The world of health care is changing—fast. New technological breakthroughs are everyday occurrences. Heart bypass surgery, one-day cataract surgery, and magnetic resonance imaging—once “new”—are commonplace in hospitals throughout the country.

At this time of revolutionary change we as a society must pause and consider the essential importance of health care from a philosophical perspective; namely, is health care a right? Or, is it a privilege belonging only to those who can afford it?

Such reflection can only help us to render wiser and more productive decisions as we confront the economic reality of advanced medical care—tremendous financial costs. By considering the background of a philosophy of the right to health and how it is played out in a country's health care system, we can begin to gain an understanding of "where we are" in order to plan "where we want to go."

"Health can be viewed as a level of physical well-being, not just the absence of a specific disease . . . ."

Only in recent times have we witnessed the emergence of a philosophical underpinning of the right to health. Over forty years ago the United Nations created the World Health Organization (WHO), giving it the seemingly impossible task of "attaining the highest possible level of health for all people regardless of color, race, or economic level." Scientific advances in medicine and in the worldwide medical programs of WHO have led the people of the world to change their fatalistic attitude toward illness and premature death. The ancient Greek adage that health care is a privilege of the rich is being replaced by the view that people, regardless of race, color, or economic level, have a right to optimum health.

This idea has solid support in terms of statutory law in many countries. It has been written into the federal statutes of most countries. During the Depression, President Franklin Roosevelt, in offering his Fourth Freedom to Congress, declared that:

Fifty years ago the matter of health was individual. It was nobody's concern except that of the family. But gradually we have built up a new doctrine, the belief that the state has a positive right to see that the health of the individual is brought up to a higher level. From now on, the state is going to insist on an optimum as a right.

This social philosophy has been interpreted in Europe as going beyond the right to only curative health. Many health care systems are striving for optimum total comprehensive care under government planning, particularly in the Scandinavian countries and in England. Optimum total comprehensive care entails curative and preventive care, with governmental involvement often required in order for the care to be effectively implemented.

This twentieth century concern with the right to health actually has a much longer history. We can go back 2,400 years to what may be considered the beginning of an international understanding of the role of health in society. The elements of a physician's duty to his patient and his obligations to his professional colleagues are found in the Hippocratic Oath:

Into whatever houses I enter, I will enter to help the sick, and I will abstain from all intentional wrong doing and harm, especially from abusing the bodies of man or woman, bond or free.

In terms of recent history, the atrocities of the prison camps of World War II helped to foster a growing concern for international standards of health for all the world's people. The World Medical Association, founded in 1947, promulgated the Declaration of Geneva in 1948 which reaffirmed the basic principles of the Hippocratic Oath on a world scale. The counterpart of this medical field document was the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the United Nations in 1948. In Article 25 of that document, everyone is recognized as having the right:

. . . to a standard of living adequate for the health and well-being of himself and of his family, including food, clothing, housing and medical care and necessary social services, and the right to security in the event of unemployment, sickness, disability, widowhood, old age, or other lack of livelihood in circumstances beyond his control.

Other declarations were published by the World Medical Association in 1957, 1964, 1968, 1970, 1973, and 1974. Various national codes, and policy statements by the International Committee of the Red Cross have been promulgated. What is not clear, however, is what the method for the realization of the goal will be. Interpretation of implementation methods varies, but these documents still do give us a strong indication of the existence of health as a full-fledged member of the emerging constellation of international rights.

As the proud mother looks on, a Paraguayan girl puts into practice a nutrition lesson learned at school. The school reaches out into the homes and acts as a center for health and nutrition education.

Before going into a deeper analysis of the existence of the right to health in today's society, it would do us well to consider just what is meant by the term "health." Health can be viewed as a level of physical well-being, not just the absence of a specific disease. Such a view of health allows for improvement in a condition of those who are not ill; it gives room for the possibility of "positive health," in which the individual with excellent health is in better condition than his merely non-sick neighbor. This sense of positive health was what the World Health Organization had in mind when it defined health as "a state of complete physical, mental, and social well-being and not merely the absence of disease or infirmity."

A certain psychological state must be evident before truly good health can be attained. A real and positive adjustment must be made to the physical, mental, social, and cultural environment of an individual, or as Brockington put it:

Health is a state of feeling well in body, mind, and spirit, together with a sense of reserve power; based upon normal functioning of the tissues, a practical understanding of the principles of healthy living, a harmonious adjustment to the environment (physical and psychological); it is a means to a richer life of service.

Health needs to be regarded as a total state of the human organism. Ole Berg has suggested that health be viewed in terms of an adaptedness, that is, the relationship of the organism to the environment in which it operates. We should be concerned with health in a social, mental, and physical context with "general" health and not just "functional" health.

A definition of health is a good starting point, but it takes people to make it work. There are many knowledgeable people concerned with the relationship between society and health who have argued that it matters little whether or not more resources are spent on medical paraphernalia in combatting "unhealthiness." They argue that people themselves are to blame for diets, liquor, cigarettes, and lack of exercise, all of which individuals have control over and can negatively affect their health. There is truth in this argument; good medicine along with the best doctors cannot affect people's health unless there is a personal commitment to take control over their own health. But this is just a part of the story. Individuals do have a certain amount of control over their own bodies, perhaps even more than most would like to admit, but the societal environment is still a major determinant of individuals' options. For example, in developed countries, automobile and road design are major contributors to accidents that impair the health of individuals.

The United States government's contradictory behavior on tobacco is another example. On the one hand, price supports are offered to farmers growing tobacco while, at the same time, the government tries to discourage its use through advertising, published medical reports, etc. An important point here is that there is a strong relationship between one's social environment and one's ability to make wise health choices. In a society that is one of mass consumption, led on by media blitzes and heavy commercialization, the question arises of who is making the body unhealthy; the company that advertises sugary rich foods or the individuals that become a part of that particular consumption pattern.

The role of health in society is not to be centered solely on the individual's needs and abilities to be and stay healthy; it is also important to consider the structure of the society and the environment in which the individuals live.

Such a view needs to be taken in light of the argument put forth by Victor Fuchs in his book Who Shall Live? The final comment Fuchs makes sums up his thinking quite appropriately:

By changing institutions and creating new programs we can make medical care more accessible and deliver more efficiently, but the greatest potential for improving health lies in what we do and don't do for and ourselves. The choice is ours.

Health care choices go hand in hand with health policies are operationalized or "turned on." The problem of implementation of health standards has been hampered at the international level by several myths, which according to Schrimshaw have obstructed international health planning

THE FIRST MYTH is that knowledge of the cause of a disease is sufficient to understand its causation and to design programs for its prevention

For instance, nutritional diseases need to be reviewed as a result of both a specific nutrient deficiency or imbalance and factors associated with age, sex, genetic background, physiological state, and the pathological characteristics of the host.

SECOND MYTH is that the first health need of populations in underdeveloped circumstances is medical care, with preventive medicine and public health a distant second. The case of the Schweitzer Hospital in Deschapelles, Haiti, and the remarkable job accomplished by Dr. Warren Hargrett with cases of severe protein-calorie malnutrition and neonatal tetanus provide ample evidence for the notion that preventive medicine does indeed have a place in seemingly adverse circumstances.

THE THIRD MYTH is that "modern health care is the priority need of all societies and has been responsible for the marked drop in mortality rates and the population explosion of recent decades." Death rates in Sweden began to fall around 1800, and they dropped at a steady rate before and after the first Statute of Public Health in 1874 and the introduction of sulfonamides in 1932. In "Population Studies," McKeon, Brown, and Record analyze the parallel decreases in mortality in England, Wales, France, Ireland, Hungary, and Sweden and have found that the only reasonable explanation for the decreases is the improvement in the supply of food, which began in Europe at the end of the eighteenth century.

In terms of the population explosion, Scrimshaw explains that the myth has grown that population growth is such a major threat to the world that family planning should have absolute priority over the other expenditures for health in developing countries." This attitude is especially prevalent among officials in bilateral and multilateral-international agencies as well as in certain foundations. The point remains, however, that improved nutrition and certain other preventive measures, such as immunization, are the best ways to reduce mortality of young children." We also need to be reminded that "the frequent contact with the family required by a good maternal/youth program reaching into the home can be the best means of promoting family planning."

ANOTHER MYTH which needs to be rectified is that "the poorer a person and the greater his need, the more time he will have available to wait in clinics, bring children to health centers, make repeated visits or attend lectures or demonstrations." The positive relationship of poverty to excess time is false. Be it the Guatemalan peasant or the struggling graduate student, small amounts of money earned do not necessarily correlate directly with large amounts of spare time.

FINALLY, the myth still exists that a program is justified by mere good intentions. Examples of this are the Applied Nutritional Programs of FAO, WHO, and UNICEF which were introduced in some 40 developing countries, some over 30 years ago. In many of the countries they are still only pilot programs, and they have a low percentage of their "benefits" actually reaching the intended population. In some countries they have been abandoned altogether.

A nation's health care system reflects the extent to which health care has been deemed to be a right in that country. By categorizing types of health care systems, we can begin to appreciate the relationship (or lack thereof) between a right to health tradition and actual health policies.

Law is reflective of societal beliefs, norms, and prerogatives. This "mirror" effect will not always be accurate, but by analyzing access to health care, deliverability of services, locations of services, etc., we can achieve an appreciation of how the law reflects the beliefs of a society as well as whether or not a right to health tradition is evident in these policy choices.

Roemer has indicated that there are four basic determinants of a health care system. These determinants give meaning to discussion of the long-range aspects of health care systems. The first of these is a historical determinant, which gives us a sense of the importance of the context in which the system evolved. (The effect of the Cuban Revolution on the health care system in Cuba is one example.) The second of these determinants is the economic level of the state being analyzed. Here we look to crucial economic indications like beds per 1,000 population, which can be quite disproportionate—Haiti having 0.75 and Canada having 10. The third determinant is the political policy that the government in power decides to initiate vis a vis the health care system. The War on Poverty that was initiated in the United States by the Johnson administration in the 1960's is an example of such a policy having a direct impact on the health care system that existed at that time. The final determinant is that of cultural influences. Here we are talking about such areas as religion and the social institution of the family. Although this is not an exhaustive list, it is nonetheless an attempt at an appreciation of just what are the basic elements of any health care system. These systems will now be reviewed to gain a comparative understanding of the nature of the right to health. The first type to be considered is that of an exchange or private health care system. The most obvious example of this type is the United States, where historically the development and use of health care resources occurred in a predominantly open market, with a minimum of intervention by the government or other mechanisms of control over the demand, supply, or price. For the most part, services have been bought and sold like other commodities. The distribution of the services depends on the purchase power of the individual.

Another type of health care system is that of public welfare involvement. Sweden is such an example. Industrialized countries have witnessed pressures which have reached the point where responsibilities for assuring health services to most of the population in accordance with their needs have been assumed by the government; this is the “welfare state.” Attempts at the equalization of access to health services have almost always been achieved by the collectivization of financial support through various social insurance mechanisms. It must be pointed out however, that much of the provision of health services remains in private hands with a variety of measures being applied by the government to control the quality and costs.

The third type of health care system is that of the developing country, where the resources for modern health services are extremely deficient. Examples abound—Bangladesh, Burma, and Nepal, for instance.

Transitional systems may be described as those countries that are still predominantly agricultural and rural but have made much progress in the development of their health care systems. Certain areas within Latin America may well be examples of this type of health care system.

The socialist system is the last major type of health care system to be considered. Cuba can be counted in this category. The Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, in particular, also fall into this category where, according to Roemer:

... health care has become essentially a public service with almost all personnel employed as civil servants and all facilities owned and operated by the government. Health service theoretically is a right of citizenship.

In each of these health care systems there are approximately seven components: economic support, manpower, facilities, delivery patterns, preventive services, regulation and administration, and planning. These components are important because they are at the core of the underlying reason for this analysis. When we consider the individual to be the focus of analysis and regard health to be a right of the individual, it becomes important to consider just how the state goes about providing services for the maintenance of that health and for the prevention of negative health conditions.

It seems that although a link between poverty and inadequate health care has been established those countries that are the poorest get little help from the richer countries. Often in developing countries, health care needs compete with other demands within the political arena. There are those who remain skeptical of the contribution that improved health care will have on economic development. Therefore, health and education have had low priorities in developing countries. However, as Costanzo asserts:

Without a healthy work force productivity suffers. Without growing productivity, the resources to sustain or expand medical care fall short of the need. In a world in which human resources are abundant while other resources grow scarce it is not only economically wasteful, it is immoral to ignore health needs.

In economic terms good health services tend to stabilize population growth and contribute to increased productivity. Strong preventive care tends to isolate, if not eradicate, epidemic diseases, thus sustaining employment and growth and avoiding the huge direct and indirect costs of widespread epidemics. Nationwide systems of health delivery tend to stabilize the populations under national governments, and economic advancement requires political stability. Good health care creates a more confident, alert work force. Just as health cannot be isolated from other socioeconomic factors in the development process, so industry, agriculture, education, and so on cannot be isolated from the health component. Whether it is the human side of enterprise or development ethics, health care and economics are tied together in extremely important ways.

Over 2000 years ago, Cicero's notion of right reason was a major determinant in the discovery of natural law, we can argue that the right to health exists and that it is binding because of philosophical considerations—reason separates man from the brutes.

Worthy health care programs may not necessarily have grown from a strong human rights philosophy. Likewise, a poorly operating program may be rooted in a genuine philosophical commitment to public health.

A contention of this analysis, however, is that by analyzing the intentions of the programs and matching them with the effects of these programs, we can arrive at a better appreciation of the philosophical considerations behind the actions. If, for example, we look only at the location of doctors and hospitals in a region, our conclusions would have limited utility. However, if the programs that put them where they exist are examined regarding the intent of the action, then we are on the road to a more fruitful philosophical inquiry as to the domestic recognition of the right of health.

Therefore, we ought to look at programs not separated from, but connected to a discussion of philosophical underpinnings. An overall view of the recognition of the right to health can then be witnessed in the development and operation of a nation's health care system. By focusing upon the philosophical side of the health care equation first, keeping in mind the possible impacts of the policy, we can be more confident of the future, for, as Mark Twain was fond of saying, "That's where I plan on living." ▲

In economic terms, good health services tend to stabilize population growth and contribute to increased productivity.

Peggy Pinkston

A TRIBUTE BY CAROLYN HENSLEY

Dr. Margaret Pinkston is an amazingly interesting woman who is equally at home in a chemistry lab wearing her tie-dyed lab coat or in a concert hall playing the violin. Peggy's father was a professor of physics at Mercer University in Macon, Georgia, where Peggy was born, and her mother taught French. Rather than sign a required statement saying he did not believe in the theory of evolution, Peggy's father left Mercer and accepted a position at Peabody College in Nashville, Tennessee. There Peggy grew up and graduated from high school.

Love of music led Peggy to the Institute of Musical Art of the Juilliard School of Music in New York, where she received her diploma in violin in three years. At that time, and for the next six years, Peggy was successful annually in competing for fellowships for study in The Juilliard Graduate School. During that time, she did take one year off to be Artist-in-Residence at the University of Georgia.

Near the end of World War II, between the end of the war in Europe and that in Japan, Peggy served six months with the USO in Germany. She was concert master of a string group of thirteen women from the United States who entertained the troops in concerts and on radio shows. Along the way, soldiers who were musicians sometimes joined the group for performances.

Billed once as "Thirteen Cuties," Peggy and the other women traveled in army trucks and occasionally ate K-rations. Peggy, however, was allergic to everything except the fruit bars, so the group all saved theirs for her. She also worked as a volunteer in hospital emergency rooms during the war.

After she and Dr. James Pinkston were married, they moved to Lebanon, where he was Dean of the Medical Division of the American University of Beirut, which included the Schools of Medicine, Nursing, and Pharmacy. Two of their three children were born in Lebanon; the third was born in Brooklyn, after they returned to the United States.

With two children in college and one in high school, Peggy decided it was time for her to go to college. She graduated magna cum laude with a

B.A. in chemistry from Brooklyn College in New York and then received her doctorate in biochemistry from City University in New York. Her academic honors include the Lowenstein Award in Chemistry-Brooklyn College, participation in the National Science Foundation Undergraduate Research Program, and election to various honor societies including Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Xi, Omicron Delta Kappa, Tri Beta and Sigma Alpha Iota.

Peggy's professional accomplishments include experiences from her careers in both science and music. In addition to her work at Mary Baldwin, she had a teaching fellowship at Brooklyn College in New York and research assistantship at The City University of New York. Besides the period at the University of Georgia as Artist-in-Residence, Peggy taught violin to non-majors while she studied at The Juilliard Graduate School. She also taught violin to children at the Juilliard Preparatory School, concertizing with solo recitals in the United States, and the Near East.

When Peggy's husband retired, he and Peggy decided they wanted to return to the south, as he was a native of Alabama. They moved to Staunton in 1976, when Peggy joined Mary Baldwin's chemistry department. While Peggy taught, Jim Pinkston work in the greenhouse on campus with Dr. Hohn, Bonnie's father.

Peggy, who has just retired as an associate professor of biochemistry, received grants from the National Science Foundation for electrophoresis and chromatography equipment, from the Virginia Academy of Science for a compensating planimeter, and faculty development funds from Mary Baldwin for lyophilizing equipment and a vertical laminar flow hood. Her publications include numerous articles and a book, Interactions of Model Proteins and Deoxyribonucleic Acids, published in 1976.

Peggy has served as director of the Honor Scholars Program and on numerous other College committees, and her students are full of praise for her. They say that she helped make biochemistry interesting and exciting and that, ever cheerful, Peggy was always available to help them understand what they were doing and why. Many have expressed gratitude for the good advice she gave them about graduation requirements.

Since officially beginning retirement, Peggy says she practices her violin "sometime other than the middle of the night. I am fresher for that in the morning." In addition, some of her research in biochemistry is not quite finished, so she would like to continue her research. She will also continue working with some of her students in the Adult Degree Program.

Other activities are taking up Peggy's free time, so she may be busier now than she was before retirement. She is a member of Covenant Presbyterian Church in Staunton and serves as a member of its Session; in addition, she is a member of the National Committee on Higher Education for the Presbyterian Church (USA) and a participating member of the Consultation on Science, Technology, and the Church.

During the summer, Peggy attended a week-long conference sponsored by the Institute on Religion and Science. It was held on Star Island, off the coast of New Hampshire. While in New England, she vacationed with family in Maine. Local groups and organizations often ask her to be guest violinist for special occasions, and she says she hopes to play in the University of Virginia Symphony this fall "now that I don't have classes at 8:30 in the morning."

Recently, the MBC student affiliate chapter of the American Chemical Society presented Peggy with a Jefferson cup inscribed "Pinkie, we love you." That sums it up for all of us, too. We do love you, Pinkie, and we will miss your happy smile. Come see us often!

FACULTY HONORED at 1989 Commencement

During Commencement, three members of Mary Baldwin's faculty were honored for outstanding contributions in the areas of teaching, scholarship, and College and community service. In making the presentations, Dean James Lott said, "The people we are honoring today are not exceptions within the faculty; rather, they are representatives of their colleagues, and they reflect, albeit in unique ways, the ideals of teaching, scholarship, and service which are lived out by all who teach and learn and serve as members of the faculty."

Assistant Professor of History Mary Hill Cole received the award for outstanding classroom teaching. Dr. Cole, who was selected by the student body, has been praised by students and colleagues alike as a superb teacher. According to other faculty members, Dr. Cole is skilled in the Socratic method, yet also able to give students the facts they need to be able to reflect on material in an informed manner. One faculty member said of Dr. Cole, "I am impressed with her mature judgment, energy, flexibility and innovative teaching, her positive outlook and deep commitment to her subject and her students."

B L A C K B U R N Named Coach of the Year

Tennis coach Lois Blackburn has been named Wilson Coach of the Year for NCAA Division III schools. Blackburn was selected as the best coach in the country among 270 Division III women's tennis programs.

Last year marked Lois' twentieth as Mary Baldwin's coach, and it was her 20th winning year, as well. Lois and her teams amassed a 223-112 record. Since 1969, Blackburn's teams, as well as individual players, have consistently achieved national rankings for team performance and have received dozens of awards for sportsmanship.

Ms. Blackburn, who retired at the end of last season, is a familiar face in collegiate tennis circles, especially in the southeastern United States. An expert on planning and conducting

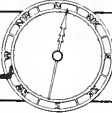

Dr. Martha Noel Evans, associate professor of French, received the Faculty Scholar award. Dr. Evans, who was chosen by the Dean and the division coordinators on nomination by the faculty, is the author of 15 articles in two areas of inquiry: French literature and women's studies. She has written two books, published by Cornell University Press, and has been the recipient of numerous fellowships and grants, including a Fulbright award. During the 1988-1989 academic year, Dr. Evans was on leave as a Guggenheim Fellow.

Bonnie Marie Hohn, associate professor of biology, was awarded the Community and College Service Award, given to a faculty member "who typifies our faculty's concern for others—students and colleagues—and for the larger community." Ms. Hohn was nominated by the faculty and chosen by the Faculty Status and Evaluation Committee. Having been on the faculty since 1966, she has served on most major College committees and has chaired the Educational Policy Committee which designs and monitors the College's academic program. She has enriched the lives of students and members of the Staunton community by sharing her vast knowledge of horticulture and, for the last several years, has served as faculty editor of the academic catalogue. ▲ tennis tournaments, she is the author of numerous articles on the topic, as well as a book, now in a third edition. She continues to teach at Mary Baldwin. ▲
